6 Protective Factors to Improve the Well-being of Children, Families, and the Community

Each resource in this directory has been identified by the protective factor(s) their services promote and/or enhance.

1. Nurturing and Attachment – Safe, stable, consistent relationships between children and trusted adults promote healthy brain development and strong bonds.
2. Knowledge of Parenting and Child Development – Parents and caregivers who understand the usual course of child development are more likely to understand children’s behavior, provide respectful communication, consistent rules and expectations, and opportunities that promote independence.
3. Parental Resilience – All parents have inner strengths that serve as a foundation on building resilience. How parents and caregivers handle stress and crisis serves as an example for children. Parents who have developed skills to manage stress, who are willing to be flexible, and to ask for help increase their ability to effectively parent children.
4. Social Connections – Parents with an emotional support network typically find it easier to care for children and themselves. It is equally important for children to have opportunities to connect with others.
5. Concrete Support – Families whose basic needs (i.e. food, housing, clothing) are met tend to have more time and energy to devote to their children’s safety and well-being.
6. Social and Emotional Competence of Children – Parents and caregivers are better able to respond to their children’s needs when children develop the ability to clearly communicate, regulate their own behavior, and interact positively with others.
